PBS opens your mind to all kinds of topics. Things that you may not have thought you were interested in but after seeing a show there you may want to look for into that topic. Unnatural Causes was about the impact of nuclear testing on the Marchalese population.

As a nurse this program has changed me for sure. It has opened my eyes to this community, the Marchalese population. It has opened my eyes to what the United States government has done in the south pacific, it has opened my eyes to what needs to be done, what are their needs and where have these patients come from so I think by watching this I will definitely have a different perspective.

I really think that knowledge has a lot to do with our understanding of the culture and PBS provided this knowledge for me.

My name is Mahealani Suapaia. PBS is my source for understanding global health care issues.
